'Modern Hebrew Culture Should Be Bible-Oriented'-Ben Gurion

Jerusalem POST Reporter

TEL AVIV, Saturday. — Prime Minister David Ben Gurion visited "Milo" — a writers and artists club — here last Thursday night to discuss current trends of thought. The Jewish nation survived until modern times because of its religion and the hatred surrounding it; now its strength lay in the State and the Bible, he said. The State was bread, military might, and culture, each as significant as the other. Hatred and religion still existed, but their force was spent, he claimed.

Mr. Ben Gurion called upon writers and artists to "revitalize the Bible," the "worderful, powerful" book whitch had influenced so many nations but which, to the Jewa, was the very source of life.

He said that the Bible should be "actualized" in the letter and spirit in which it had been conceived. The shepherd who kissed Shulamith in the "Song that Mr. Rariv's concept was that of the Disspora. The Jews nation was not 2,000 years.

In America, once the loud noise of Benator McCarthy and his friends had died down, it was recognised that the British Prime Minister's proposals, though accompanied by fewer reservations, were in substance only an emphasizing of the President's own words, that he favoured any stap that seemed to have a reasonable chance of advancing the peace. Mr. Churchill's proposal, wrote the "Christian Science Monitor" merely "suggests that a Big Power meeting would be a useful means of testing whether the Kremiin mow wants to deal in deeds as well as words." There may be some differences of opinion between America and her allies about the form and manner of the tests; and it is there that the Bermuda conference should serve a practical and constructive end, especially if, as there is reason to hope, the Korean negotiations for an armistice have by that time come successfully to their conclusion.
